Social inclusion is one of the biggest challenges for contemporary cities, because of the nature of the controversies it should address. As for the other pillars of the New European Bauhaus (aesthetics and sustainability), any approach to this challenge would not have any effectiveness without a deep socio-cultural change. The third seminar of the series explores the challenges and opportunities for cultural actions to promote change towards a more inclusive urban environment. We would like to focus on the generative capacity that could support cultural actions that drive change towards more inclusive cities.
