Deciding. Aiding to decide.

Participating in decision processes. Responsibility, Liability and Legitimacy.

The lecture introduces the difference between decision and decision aid and therefore, between decision process and decision aiding process. We formalise the later concept using a number of cognitive artefacts characterising the activities of aiding to decide and we detail the contents. We then introduce the notion of participation and participative decision making, the distribution of decision power and we suggest a definition of conflict functional to conflict transformation and management activities. The lecture concludes introducing the notions of responsibility and liability of decision aiding and addresses a number of ethical questions for decision support practice.
