Migration and Urban Space: Plans, Projects, and Policies

How and why should we talk about this?

A seminar series promoted by
Paola Briata and Martina Bovo
(DASStU, Politecnico di Milano)

The relationship between planning tools and migrant spaces is relatively underexplored in academic debates. While various administrations have developed responses to migration, most planning tools lack a shared reflection on the specific needs of migrants and their interactions with native populations.

What types of descriptions of people, places, and practices are needed to plan for areas where established populations and newcomers live? What are the planning experiences and tools from EU to local levels in migration contexts? How can these topics be included into the teaching of urban planning and architecture?

This three-day seminar series aims to address these questions engaging international scholars, public administrations, civil society representatives, and Dastu scholars.

To share reflections and strengthen networks, all seminars will variously involve colleagues from DASStU, including
Alice Buoli, Carlotta Caciagli, Giada Casarin, Grazia Concilio, Marta Cordini, Emma Garavaglia, Maryam Karimi, Carolina Pacchi, Paola Piscitelli, Costanzo Ranci, Alice Ranzini, Stefania Sabatinelli, Paola Savoldi
